Our beloved cat Zoë was diagnosed with cancer. She was only 7 years old and we didn't want her to suffer. She passed away peacefully while taking a nap. It's hard to believe that our little "cat angel" is no longer with us, but her story deserves to be told. We took the best pictures we could take of her, played some of her favorite songs, and watched some of her favorite TV shows. But there was more that we wanted to do. So we decided to make a video of our beloved cat. She always loved life and was curious about everything she saw. We wanted to share her story, and asked our friends and family to help us make the best video we could. Some of you will know that I took a photography course, and I always wanted to make videos. So we put our passions together and asked our friends to help us. We used our home video camera, and we paid a professional to help us edit. My sister brought her friend to the house and set up to help. We got the best shots of Zoë, captured our family and friends. When it was finished, we uploaded it to YouTube to share it with the world. The video shows Zoë's life. Her life was short, but she had a big impact on our lives. She loved life, and we will always be grateful for that.
